Are Bogut's remarks bogus?

Milwaukee Bucks center Andrew Bogut appeared on the Australian talk show "The Nation" on July 3, and his interview is making waves in the United States after cuts of the broadcast were posted on YouTube.

Bogut's Dirk Nowitzki haircut was gone. The only hair he had left was a braided strand on the back of his head. Questionable style.

Bogut made some questionable remarks, too. When host Mick Malloy asked how he likes Milwaukee, Bogut divulged two interesting "facts."

Malloy Do you like it in Milwaukee?

Bogut Per capita it's the drunkest city in America.

Malloy Now I'm listening! (audience laughter)

Bogut And the fattest city in America, per capita. (more laughter)
 Is Milwaukee a city of fat, drunken slob? MKE did some research.

DRUNK? MAYBE

The Brew City is known for beer. We've been known to party. Easy to see where this impression comes from. Forbes.com rated Milwaukee "America's Drunkest City" in August 2006, citing that Milwaukee ranked high in several drunkenness factors collected by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. A legit study.

Point for Bogut.

FAT? NO WAY

On "Family Guy," Peter Griffin quips: "Everyone has their sanctuary. Catholics have churches; fat people have Wisconsin." Ouch. We admit it, at Summerfest, it's hard not to notice the flabby flesh. But sources indicate that Milwaukee isn't the fattest city.

Men's Magazine rated Chicago the fattest city in America in 2006. Milwaukee wasn't even in the top 10; it was the No. 5 fittest city. WebMD.com dubbed Houston the fattest city in 2005. Milwaukee was not in the top 10 here, either. Bogut is bogus here.
